WISE Components Transforms Operations with AxiomHQ

WISE COMPONENTS

WISE Components has been a stalwart in the electronic components and connectivity products market since 1975. Originally focused on the tube industry, the company adapted to market changes and now provides essential infrastructure for technology, catering strictly to wholesale trade.

With a legacy of expertise, WISE Components plays a crucial role in ensuring the seamless functioning of various technologies, from medical equipment like blood analyzers to everyday connectivity products.

Introduction to Axiom Software

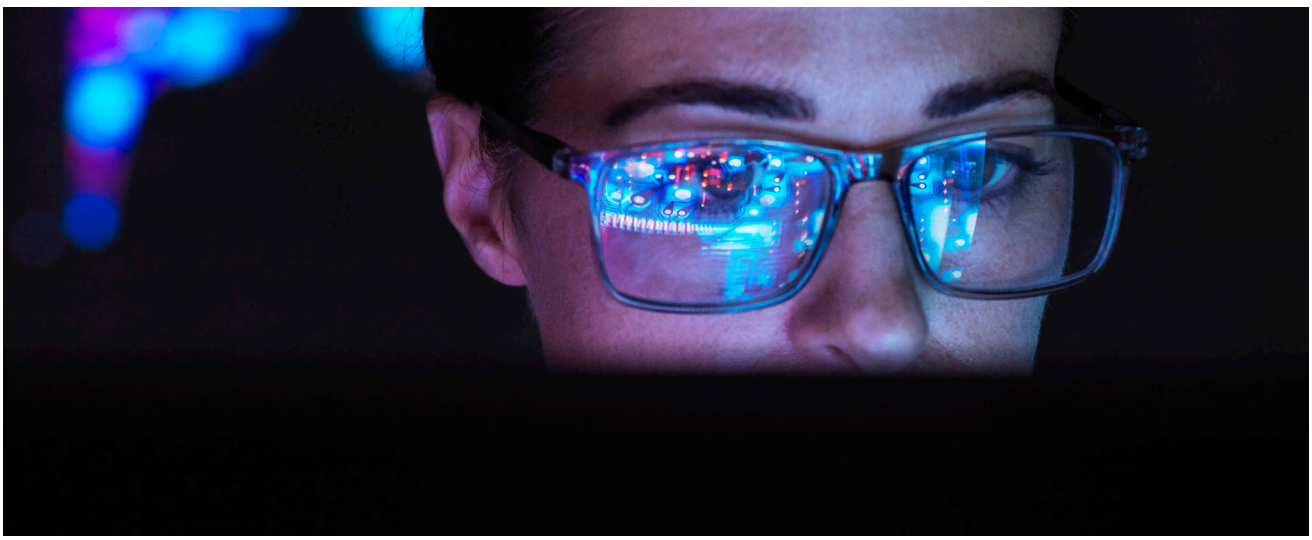

WISE Components made the original jump to Axiom Software in 2006, utilizing their original eDPS system. Facing end-of-life challenges with their existing servers, the decision to transition from the old eDPS system to AxiomHQ was driven by a desire for heightened security, cost efficiency, and a more than optimal move to the cloud environment. The decision to opt for AxHQ was based on the belief that it represented the future of their space.

Operational Efficiency

Axiom Software's impact on WISE Components' operational efficiency has been substantial. AxHQ presents a robust database compared to eDPS. A significant improvement is seen in stock management, order processing, and inventory control. The new system eliminates the need for a third-party CRM system, resulting in net savings and a more streamlined workflow. While there are similarities in functionality between eDPS and AxHQ, the latter offers a more modern and efficient approach.

Incoming inspection processes have improved, and the system's export functionality allows for easier data manipulation and reporting. WISE Components anticipates even greater efficiency as Axiom Software continues to refine AxHQ. An envisioned mobile app for on-the-go access is seen as a future enhancement, providing any sales team with quick, real-time information without the need for a laptop.

The transition to AxHQ via Axiom Software has positioned WISE Components for a more efficient, secure, and future-ready operational environment. The move away from eDPS signifies a commitment to staying at the forefront of technology in the ever-evolving electronic components market.
